THE BOLD LITTLE MOUSE

ONCE upon a time, not so very long ago, there lived a mouse who thought he was a lion! It had happened this way:

Soon after the mouse (whose name was Marty) was born, he had wandered away by himself into a tunnel formed from logs and rocks. In the tunnel a beetle had begun to run up his leg. "Eek!" squeaked Marty Mouse. But, in the hollow tunnel, his teensy-weensy 'eek' sounded like this: "EEK!" In fact, to Marty, who had an excellent imagination, it sounded like an enormous roar, and not like a squeak at at all.

"My my my!" thought the mouse, as he ran out of the tunnel. "What a loud voice I have! I must be a lion!"

Whenever anyone called him a mouse after that, he just laughed. He thought they were joking. He was even more convinced that he was a lion one day when he met a great big cat.

"Hello, great big cat," Marty Mouse had said to her with a friendly smile. And he had held out his tiny paw to shake hands with her.

The cat had just stared at him. The cat had stared in absolute amazement! "My heavens!" the cat had been thinking. "This little mouse isn't afraid of me! He must be crazy!" And the cat was so fascinated to meet such a crazy mouse, that it stared with its green eyes as big as quarters.

"Ho ho!" thought Marty Mouse to himself. "This proves I'm a lion! If I were a mouse, that cat would pounce on me and eat me. But since I am a lion, that cat is terrified! That cat is so scared of me she's paralyzed with fear! Poor thing!"

His friends tried to point out to him how wrong he was. When they passed a store door with him one day, they said to him, "Marty, notice your reflection in the glass pane of that door. See how small you are? A lion is huge. You are tiny. So you are a mouse."

But Marty just smiled and replied, "That's not glass, you silly mice. That's a trick mirror, like they have in carnivals. Even though I'm huge, it makes me look small. Isn't it funny?" And Marty gazed at his reflection and laughed and laughed and laughed.

No, nothing could persuade him that he was a mouse.

Then, finally, came the day that everyone had known must arrive some day. There came the day when Marty Mouse came face-to-face with a lion! It was Lionel Lion, King of the Jungle—five-hundred pounds of hard muscle! Everyone was afraid of him, even the other lions. He was so big and strong, and his roar was so frightening, that whenever anyone met him, they simply turned and ran!

But not Marty! He smiled happily when he saw Lionel, and said, "Ah, my friend, isn't it a fine afternoon? Shall we walk along together?"

Lionel Lion's jaw dropped. Someone who didn't run away from him! Someone who seemed to like him! Someone, at last, who he could talk to! "Yes, mouse, let's walk," the lion said gratefully.

"I'm a lion," explained Marty.

"Okay. Anything you say," Lionel answered happily. And the two lions were best friends from that day on!
